As in the 1920s, the majority of banks that failed during the Depression were small rural banks whose prosperity depended largely on agriculture. Alston, Grove and Wheelock (1994) show that differences in farm foreclosure rates explain much of the interstate variation in bank failure rates during 1926-29.

Regulation, Market Structure, and the Bank Failures of the

A bank failure is the closing of a bank by a federal or state banking regulatory agency. One indicator of a bank's health is its relative level of regulatory capital, which cushions banks against losses from nonpayment of loans and other losses on assets.

GAO-13-71, FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS: Causes and Consequences

The bank failures of the 1920s were heaviest in states with the most rapid growth prior to the 1920s (Wicker 1996, 7). Difficulties suffered by farmers in the Midwest seem to have driven much of the failure. Between 1921 and 1930, half of all small banks in agricultural regions failed.

Depression-Era Bank Failures: The Great Contagion or the

As Peter Temin (1976) and many others have noted, the bank failures during the Depression marked a continuation of the severe banking sector distress that had gripped agricultural regions throughout the 1920s. Of the nearly 15,000 bank disappearances that occurred between 1920 and 1933, roughly half predate 1930.
